New York—WASHINGTON—Paris.

On Sale Tomorrow, Wednesday, Morning.

These Two Special Values in Cotton Dress Fabrics.

25c New Cotton Crepe, 18c yard.

One of the most fashionable of the summer dress materials. This lot has just been received. It was all the manufacturer had remaining and he closed it out to us at a concession. Clean, cool goods in Dolly Varden, pompadour and jowy designs on white grounds. An exceptional value at the Special price, 18c yard. Regularly 25c.

50c Silk Stripe Voile, 38c yard.

A very appropriate material for pretty summer frocks and winter evening gowns as well. Dainty Dolly Varden, pompadour and jowy designs, in pink, blue and yellow shades on white ground. While the quantity in this lot, we believe, is ample, certain patterns are sure to be more popular than others; hence an early inspection is advisable.

Special price, 38c yard. Regularly 50c.

Continuing Midsummer Disposal Fine Lace Curtains

At 1/4, 1/3 and 1/2 Less Regular Prices.

While the price reductions are an important consideration in this annual disposal of Fine Lace Curtains, the high quality of the materials and the great latitude in the variety of designs should be equally recognized. It means that we are taking from our regular stocks three or four hundred pairs of Curtains and placing once-a-year low prices on them for effective clearance. Odd lots, two to twelve pairs of a kind, discontinued patterns, lines that will not be duplicated and must be sold before we begin the fall season.

Handsome Renaissance Curtains, Irish Point Lace Curtains and Lacet Arabian Curtains, Cluny Lace Curtains; imported and domestic makes; sill and full lengths; white and ecru.

The collection is large enough to enable you to make a selection for whatever purpose curtains may be needed in your plans for fall home furnishing; the prices should be an inducement for you to make your selection at this time.

Prices range, from $2.75 to $20.00 pair. Formerly $4.00 to $40.00.

We Are Making Special Low Summer Prices for Reupholstering, Repairing and Refinishing Furniture

In addition to the very low rates which prevail at this season for all work of this character, to retain intact our force of skilled workmen, we also offer a varied line of excellent materials for reupholstering of furniture. Many of them at special prices. We ask your attention and inspection of a line of Silk Damask which we consider an excellent value. All the desirable colorings are represented, and we place them on sale at the exceptionally favorable prices,

$2.00, $3.00 and $3.50 yard. Regularly up to $6.50.

French Willow Furniture At Very Attractive Prices.

We want every housewife to think as well of Willow Furniture as we do. Many already appreciate its great utility and appropriateness in refined home decoration. It is furniture that can be made useful in every living apartment of the home, whether it be drawing room, library, den, reception room or porch. Stained any shade to harmonize with the decorative scheme, or in natural color. We maintain the special values, here enumerated, to get you better acquainted with this ideal furniture.

TEMPLARS PLAN OUTING.

Tomorrow's Excursion to Marshall Hall to Be Made Notable.
Tomorrow is expected to be a banner day in Templar Masonry in the District of Columbia, as Columbia Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, has completed arrangements to give a complimentary excursion to Marshall Hall. A large crowd is expected to be present and participate in the festivities.
Athletic events will feature the day's entertainment. One of the races which it is believed will prove of great interest will be that of a 100-yard dash for Knights Templar only. Upon the arrival of the evening boat the drill team of Columbia Commandery will give a farewell exhibition drill. This will be its last drill before departing for Denver, where it is entered in the class A drill.
C. J. Meets, present member of the house of delegates from Prince William county, Va., has been declared the democratic candidate for re-election.

"POTHOOKED" HIS WAY INTO REGARD OF WILLIAM J. BRYAN

BY EARL GODWIN.

Once upon a time the train which bore the sleeping and utterly worn-out William Jennings Bryan through a mountain pass in western Maryland stopped at a town whose leading feature was the large and useful water tank from which a thirsty locomotive might drink. It was, in fact, the leading tank town of that section of railroad, and although the sun was not above the horizon, and the stars were still brightly shining in a black and almost wintry sky, the town's delegation of democrats was there at the station. They thought that Bryan was always up, always making speeches, always smiling and always standing on the back platform of a car.

They believe to this day that Bryan made a speech to them. But he didn't. He doesn't know the train stopped there for it was not Bryan who went out on the platform to address them, but Robert F. Rose, now one of the two foreign trade advisers of the Department of State, and at that time traveling as Bryan's stenographer. Rose, who is the only man in his government, scented trouble and rolling from his berth, arrayed himself in Bryan's coat, hat and trousers, and in the darkness, aided by the broad black sombrero, tickled the crowd to death.

He's a Plain Citizen.

That was Robert Rose. And now, having been properly introduced to our fellow townsman, let's call him plain Bob Rose, for he is a shirt-sleeve fellow, and will talk to any one in his own language, and write a letter on the typewriter at the same time, and never miss a sentence from either conversation or letter.

Bob is probably the only man who has climbed into politics directly on his stenography, and from all appearances he is the only man that Secretary of State Bryan will trust with a large order of really confidential dictation or stenography of any sort.

Bryan brought him here to Washington, ostensibly to hold down the job in the foreign trade advisers bureau of the State Department, which is the lineal descendant of the old bureau of foreign relations, and actually to bring him here because he was so used to calling on Bob whenever there was a real ticklish bit of stenography to be done that he didn't feel at home without him. He took Bob to California with him, when he went there to talk face to face with the California legislature about that yellow peril, which means so much more to them than it does to the east.

Now that was a gigantic task of reporting. There are, perhaps, 170 members of the California legislature, and all of them seemed to want to talk to Secretary Bryan. Bob did not know the names of one of them, and they would get up to speak all over the chamber at once. It was an executive meeting, and there were reasons why the members of the legislature did not want to talk too loud. But Bob got it all.

An Incident of Speed.

He was official stenographer of the democratic national convention at Kansas City in 1904. To show what a speed king he is with the quills and curves of stenography, that convention closed July 6, at 3:17:35 p. m., and the finished transcript, typewritten and clamped, giving every word uttered, up to the last motion to adjourn, was handed to the secretary at 3:17:45 o'clock—just eight seconds after the gavel fell. Bob Rose had kept the stuff up to date, and, of course, had taken the last few minutes directly on a typewriter.

He has never given away a secret; and that is why Secretary of State Bryan sends for him to take confidential dictation while he rides to and from home in a carriage or motor car. He got acquainted with Bryan back in '96, when he was covering the convention for the Associated Press, and did some work for him there. Then he saw him "between times," and worked for Bryan in the campaign of 1900 and 1908. He was his confident, stenographer, press agent and double. He grew to worship Bryan. Bryan came to need him.

Born to Newspaper Work.

He was born a newspaper man, and that interesting event occurred in the city of Burlington, Wis. His father ran a little country paper and print shop. It was one of those husky little papers where the editor would result in gun play and hospital attendance. Bob and his mother were indeed in the pressroom, the composing room and editorial sanctum with equal facility, and then struck for the law office of his brother, David S. Rose, who has been mayor of Milwaukee. Dave would not let Bob lose touch with the press. One day he came into the office and found little brother Bob with his feet on a desk.

"Quit it and get to studying."

"You'll have to get a new library. These I've read every line in it," said Bob.

Then he became a newspaper man for five years, worked on some of the biggest papers and covered some of the biggest events in the west. He was a stenographer and newspaper man in a way that is indeed unique. He covered prize fights and conventions with equal ability, and Melville E. Stone, general manager of the Associated Press, grew to have great faith in him. Bob started a school for stenography and a magazine all at the same time and was handling them both, with a real enterprise thrown in, when Bryan sent for him on his more important travel with him in a presidential campaign. He speeded up the magazine, by working twenty-four hours a day for several days, contributed to it from the road, kept most of the other work going and worked to the entire satisfaction of William Jennings Bryan in the meantime.

So if you see a large, husky person taking notes with lightning-like rapidity in Secretary Bryan's motor car—that will probably be Bob Rose.

AMUSEMENTS.

Columbia.

When Carl Anthony, the new leading man at the Columbia, made his first appearance last night as Prince Otto he probably realized that he was facing an audience that regretted the absence of the favorite whose place he was taking, and of critics ready to compare his work with that of Otis Skinner, who has been seen here in the romantic comedy founded on Robert Louis Stevenson's story that gives the play its name.

His cordial reception as he stepped across Farmer Leopold's cottage door—a boyishly buoyant young hunkman in green velvet and flaring scarlet tights and his reputed recitals at the end of each act, must have been as welcome to the man who succeeded Mr. Buren as to the actor who had made good in the Otis Skinner play. Young and handsome enough to occupy that Parsifal niche reserved exclusively for matinee idols, the Columbia's new leading man has—what is much more satisfactory to the average theatergoer—clear, natural voice, ready laughter, a dignity of pose, and best of all assets, that indelible grin. He is, for lack of a better word, magnificent.

Helen Holmes, as Princess Seraphina, combined royal dignity with girlish charm. In the council chamber she participated in government affairs with the earnestness of the crown princess, and in the love scene with Prince Otto at the close of the play, Willard Robertson, as the corrupt prime minister, was as artistically villainous as the obvious honesty of his face permitted, and as Countess Von Rosen, Carrie Thatcher made a captivating adventuress streaked with refreshing humor. Jessie Glendening, as a peasant girl, played her part as well as her lover, and John M. Kline, as Farmer Leopold, had for their family background a rather comical scene with open windows and that looked out on woody fields, where the play had its opening and ending. Miss Glendening was picturequely satisfying, and, as always, her work was artistically good.

George W. Barber, too, was all that could be expected of a black and loyal personage as the doctor of Otto's court, and others who added to the excellence of the cast were Elsie Michard, as Countess Reugerstadt; Stanley James, as the lord chancellor; Arthur Ritchie, as commander of the palace guard; C. A. Vance, as Count Steinbach; Charles Dwyer, Herr Von Slopts; and John Ellis and William Latta, as attendants.

Prince Otto, as all lovers of Stevenson know, is a debonaire but somewhat graceless young ruler of a principality that is believed will prove of great interest will be that of a 100-yard dash for Knights Templar only. Upon the arrival of the evening boat the drill team of Columbia Commandery will give a farewell exhibition drill. This will be its last drill before departing for Denver, where it is entered in the class A drill.

C. J. Meets, present member of the house of delegates from Prince William county, Va., has been declared the democratic candidate for re-election.

SAYS "LET COURT STOP"; THEN HE GOES TO JAIL

Steam Shovel Boss Thought His Work More Important Than Mill of Justice.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 29.—When a steam shovel interferes with the Allegheny county courts the steam shovel must cease operations, and when the superintendent in charge indicates that, in his mind, the removal of Pittsburgh's "hump" is more important than the dispensation of justice the superintendent must go to jail.

These principles were laid down in the common pleas court yesterday by Judge R. A. Kennedy, who was annoyed by the puffing of a steam shovel engaged in excavation on a street near the courthouse. He ordered the shovel stopped, and when the noise continued he issued a warrant and had the crew brought into court. The superintendent in charge was asked to judge whether it would be better to stop the shovel or stop the court. The superintendent replied that if they interfered the court should stop, and was promptly sentenced to jail for contempt. The remainder of the crew were released on their promise to do no work while the court was in session.

GOING TO HOLY LAND.

Vermont Avenue Baptist Church Pays Pastor's Vacation Expenses.

Rev. James E. Willis, pastor of the Vermont Avenue Baptist Church, is to leave Friday for a trip to England and the Holy Land. He will preach his last sermon before leaving Thursday evening.

Rev. Mr. Willis was granted a two-month leave of absence and was presented with $500 for the trip by the church at the regular conference meeting. A delegation from the church will accompany him as far as New York.

While he is away electric lights will be installed, metal ceilings will be put in the church, and the edifice will be painted outside and redecorated. A grand anniversary reception will be tendered the pastor on his return.

Speaks at Camp Good Will.

Representative Taggart of Kansas addressed the children at Camp Good Will yesterday afternoon. Last night a Punch and Judy show was given by the men of the navy yard, under the direction of Harry Andrew.
